I argue that these conceptions have mainly focused on four aspects: 1 the integration of several disciplines, 2 the integration of science and society, 3 the reference to localness, time, and uncertainty, and 4 action and problem orientation. There is always the challenge of deciding on the appropriate content for values-based education. What moral standards and ethical principles should be included?

There is a conceptual vagueness leading to many misunderstandings and confusion. View Synopsis. May Can values be measured? More effort is needed to build the ethical needs of society into the very fabric of society and the economy and to add them to the corporate charters of businesses where they can influence management performance.
